State Rights.

We have elways felt that the part to be Constitution was of the lost importance, and the powers of the Federal Government; but but small powers, incompetent to do the du ties of independent governments, and should not assume the responsibility of a position they.ere utterly incompetent to maintain We are proud of Kentucky, as one of the many that make up this Union. There is no brighter star in the golaxy; but by herself, she is helpiess against a third rete power of the world, except from her geographical position. We are proud of her as a State, not as a nation.

It was amusing to read the exultation of a South Carolina advocate who rejoiced in the sublime position of that pleasune Commonwealth, that she hed assumed her place smongst the nations of the earth. South Corolina, with her population of 300,000 white people, setting hereelf up to be a nation! The smallest principality of Europe could enub her with impunity. Without help, she could hardly support hereelf against a nost of pirates. Kentucky is three times as strong as South Carolina in population, and greatly her superior in all the resources of Independence; yet she would be powerless against an enemy re spectable amongst nations. If she admit this right to State Independence now oleim ed, all the States South and East of her my set up for themselves, and leave her ln s heart of a continent shul out from all the world, and at the mercy of any com bination of enemles. We mey talk of courage and prowess in war, but the bravado of a puny arm is hardly serious enough to arouse the resentment of a formidable one. The valor of a little State is of no avail in thie world of ours. "If this proposition pre vail, ell llesse Cassel will be in arms," said a epunky chief of that country, and the representatives of the great powers justly took it as a first-rate joke. According to the present theory South, we are not a Government; we are thirty-four little princi palities; each a sovereign able to throw off all the obligations to other nations and to the rest of the principalities at discretion Such is the great United States of America. The old States General, and the present

German Confederation, is of the same sort; rather better; and the latter is imbecile and powerless in the face of on enemy; so shell we be, If these State pretensions are sustained. llow anxious men seem to reduce their Governments to hopeless imbecility! creeting little nations, too small to be and the undivided Union, than any freg-It seems that Congress has been going on respectable and utterly unable to take care ment of it. respectable and unterly unable to take care of themselves.
